Twelve Series of Perfumes. A leading authority on perfumes divides the entire list into twelve series-(1) floral, as of the rose, violet and the like: (2) herbal, as of bergamot, mint and other aromatic plants; (3) the grass series, comprising several fragrant grasses which grow in Ceylon or India, as the orange grass, which contains an essential oil identical with that of the orange, and ginger grass, which has the perfume of the ginger root; (4) the citrine series, comprising the orange, lemon and their combine tions; (5) the spice series, derived from the clove, cinnamon, allspice and the Ilke; (6) the wood series, as the sandalwood, sassafras, rosewood, which derives its name not from the fact that it has the color of roses, but from the odor exhaled by it when freshly cut; (7) the root series, as the orris root and many others; (8) the seed series, as the caraway and vanilla; (9) the balm and gum series, of which there are many varieties; (10) all perfumes and essences derived from fruits. The eleventh series consists of combinations of the foregoing varieties, and the twelfth comprises all animal perfumes of whatever nature.

How Large New Zealand Is,

New Zealand is popularly supposed to be a group of comparatively unimportant islands lying close off the coast of Australia and subject to what is vaguely termed "the Australian government." As a matter of fact, it is about equal in area to the British Islands, is distant some 1,200 miles from the neighboring continent, is an independent, self governing colony and possesses more beautiful and varied scenery than any other single country of the world except the United States. This colony consists of two large islands and a third small one, called Stewart Island, to the south. The two North island and the Middle island, but in ordinary language the Middle island is termed the South island. As the South island is nearer to the ant- | Total. arctic circle than the North island, it has, especially in its southernmost part, a cold climate.
